Grants Received:

- 5/24 Investigator, A National Qualitative Examination of Risk and Resilience Factors Associated with Burnout in Pediatric Intensive Care Physicians Fleur-des-Lis Grant Program

We aim to leverage Conservation of Resources Theory to conduct qualitative interviews with PICU critical care physicians to explore factors contributing to the development of burnout syndrome (BOS). To accomplish these aims we will conduct 1.5 hour semi-structured qualitative interviews of 10-15 PICU physicians practicing at locations in the United State and Canada. Interviews will be conducted in-person, with single participants and will be delivered by pairs of study team members who have no preexisting or ongoing relationships with the study participants, expertise in conducting qualitative interviews on traumatic stress, and a successful, four-year track record of working as co-interviewers on four other funded research studies. To permit in-person interviews with a geographic diversity of PICU physicians, interviews will be scheduled using the novel approach to data collection by scheduling and conducting all interviews during the annual congress of the Society for Critical Care Medicine (SCCM), February 23-25, 2025 in (Orlando, Florida, USA)

Principal Investigator: Jason Werner, MD.

$25,000 from July 1, 2024 – June 30, 2026

3/23

Principal Investigator, A Qualitative Examination of Risk and Resiliency Factors Associated with Burnout in Pediatric Intensive Care Providers Health Research Grant

We aim to conduct an in-depth examination of an array of workplace-related stressors as described by registered nurses (RNs) in the PICU at Cardinal Glennon Children's Hospital.

Preliminary qualitative and quantitative research with the Glennon PICU healthcare team members revealed that these factors may be associated with burnout. They include: 1) Challenging interactions with the patient's family, including discordance between medical team and patient family expectations; 2) RN perceptions of institutional and team support; and 3) Trauma-related features of patient deaths. In addition to these stressors, we will examine the ways in which personal and institutional resources may buffer stressor impact. Although we know these factors may manifest in burnout, we lack an understanding of how they are interrelated as well as which aspects are most impactful. We seek a greater understanding of these factors by conducting semi-structured interviews with PICU nurses guided by the Conservation of Resources theoretical model.

Principal Investigator, Intimate Partner Violence (IPV) and Healthcare Utilization among African American Women

The AHEAD Institute

The proposed study explicates a quantitative extension of what we have found in our qualitative research to explore factors associated with IPV severity. These factors will include IPV-related drug use, threat or use of a gun and sexual assault or rape. These factors intersect with racist tropes and stereotypes that may be manifest in society writ large as well as within healthcare settings. This within participants study will Compare rates and types of healthcare, help-seeking for those Black women whose IPV experiences include one or more of these factors with those Black women whose IPV experiences do not include these factors. We predict that those Black women with one or more of the IPV-related severity factors (drug use, sexual assault or rape, gun use) will evidence diminished healthcare-related help-seeking.

- 10/21 Principal Investigator, Black Survivors of Intimate Partner Violence: Community Advisory Board Stolle Award
 The primary aim of this award is to fund the development and implementation of a community advisory board to foster research-community collaboration to ensure the ethical and successful conduct of research on Black women’s experiences with help-seeking for intimate partner violence.
 $1,500 for one year
- 7/21 Co-Principal Investigator, Intimate Partner Violence (IPV) Service Providers’ Perspectives on Racism and Race-related Challenges for Black Survivors’ Experiences
Doerr Center for Social Justice Education and Research
 The major goal of this pilot study is to interview executive directors of domestic violence agencies to follow-up on their experiences with mid-phase COVID-19 on victims of domestic violence and to examine perceptions and views of providers on IPV among Black women and explore gaps and opportunities in providing culturally congruent care to Black survivors. Systemic racism and the impact on IPV service provision and the intersection with disparities in COVID-19 outcomes will also be explored.
 Principal Investigator: Vithya Murugan, Ph.D.
 $13, 362 for one year
- 3/21 Co-Principal Investigator, Racism and Race-related Challenges for Black Women Seeking Services for Intimate Partner Violence
Beaumont Scholarship Research Award
 This study will amplify Black women’s voices to identify IPV-related, culturally informed help-seeking barriers, resources and identify pathways of resilience. Information from this study may inform ways of reducing barriers for Black women’s access to traditional IPV services, suggest ways of augmenting nontraditional services and for creating messaging regarding help-seeking within family and peer networks.
 Principal Investigator: Vithya Murugan, Ph.D.
 $9683.00
- 4/20 Co-Principal Investigator, Effects of Covid-19 on Survivors of Domestic Violence and Service Provisions in the STL Metropolitan Area
Spark Microgrant
 The major goal of this pilot study are to interview executive directors of domestic violence agencies to examine the effect of COVID-19 on victims of domestic violence, the effect of Covid-19 on service provision to victims of domestic violence and challenges and opportunities in the wake of Covid-19 on victim services and advocacy.

Principal Investigator: Vithya Murugan, Ph.D.

3/20

Co-Investigator, A Novel Application of Narrative Exposure Therapy: Examining Effects on Posttraumatic Stress Disorder, Functioning, and Urges to Retaliate for Victims of Gun Violence

Applied Health Science Research Grant Program

The major goal of this grant` is to advance the application of narrative exposure therapy to the treatment of PTSD within victims of gun violence. A novel application includes an examination for the potential for this form of PTSD treatment to disrupt retaliation ideation.

Principal Investigator: Andrew Oberle, M.S.
$9000 for one year.

9/19

Principal Investigator, ScalingUP Integrated Behavioral Health Treatment for OUD: Engaging Primary Care and Tele-Health

Health Resources and Services Administration: Graduate Psychology Education

The major goal of this grant is to train pre-doctoral clinical psychology students to provide integrated, interdisciplinary behavioral health and opioid use disorder and other substance use disorder prevention and treatment services and high demand areas.

$820, 175 for three years

12/16

Co-Investigator, Addressing child maltreatment with social marketing and bystander intervention models

Missouri Foundation for Health

The major goal of this project is to develop, implement and evaluate a bystander program to train individuals how to best intervene when observing public instances of child maltreatment. We will complement this strategy with a social marketing campaign and work with community partners to plan for widespread dissemination.
